

Zayd Sanders
Assignment #6

Lately I have been working on a camera flash effect using Adobe Flash for the Yip Yips Episodes. The episodes consist of the aliens coming down to Sesame Street and discovering something new like a jacket, robot, or a vending machine. They say specific words that are supposed to teach children what those words mean like buy and pull. At the end of their adventure they always take a selfie with what ever they discovered. At first my supervisor told me what we should do with those 7 frames in the animation. The first time I worked on the scene it took me around 2 workdays. After it was done I showed him it and he loved the way it came out. Right after he gave me the next assignment, which was the next episode. This time around it took one day for me to complete. Now I have done four episodes. The cool thing about working on those assignments is that these are final products that will be seen by hopefully millions.

I feel like I've done a pretty good job. Especially since I have made people compliment me on the work. And I can see the progress since it doesn't take long for me to do certain things as it used to when and before I started the internship.
