Who We Are

Human Services is a profession that is a learned craft, coupled with the social, cultural, economic, political and biological aspects of a society. In addition, individuals, family and communities are often the focus of agents in need of services, which a human service professional can provide. To deliver these services, the human service student is exposed to various professional and liberal arts learning at City Tech, where the associate and bachelor human service degree curriculum aids in this important preparation. Students then apply this knowledge to quality direct practice, using their educational skills in multiple employment arenas of their choice.

Curriculum includes: Counseling: Individual, group, family, mental health, gerontology; community organization; physical/mental/developmental disabilities/trauma; criminal justice; research; grant writing, management/supervision; volunteer and internship experiences. Human Service graduates work in positions such as: case manager, social services supervisor, senior center director, job counselor, child welfare worker, group residence director/ supervisor, information and referral specialist, outreach worker, public health worker, mental health associate, substance abuse counselor, vocational counselor, probation, parole officer.

Degrees Conferred

The associate degree program (AAS) in Human Services is designed to prepare students for entry-level career positions in a variety of human services occupations.
