I play a sport called volleyball which I am fairly passionate about considering how much I talk about it. It is a very difficult sport to learn which is one of the main reasons i love it so much, i've been playing for about a year and i still can't do the basics to the standards i have set for myself. It is also different in the way that I have a completely different attitude when i'm on court compared to when i'm off court. I am much more serious compared to my goofy carefree self and as focused as i can because in this game, a small mistake can cost you so much more than just a point. The momentum you've gain, team spirit all of that comes down to just a simple mistake, it can cost you the game as well so i'm forced to be much more serious on court unlike how i usually am.
